

How to add to Favourites

 Print this guide

If you use the internet to venture into the World Wide Web on a regular basis, you'll soon encounter websites that you may want to return to. Obviously, you could write down each one's address (also known as a 'url', for 'uniform resource locator') or you could do a search for them each time you want to access them. But why do that when you can use Favourites?

With Favourites, as they are called in Internet Explorer (they're 'bookmarks' in the Firefox and Safari browsers), you can store web addresses and so easily revisit pages that you like. Favourites can appear either in a list or on the 'Favourites Bar' ('bookmarks toolbar') right at the top of the browser home page. Where you put them really depends on how often you want to visit a particular site.
